About Living Paintings

Living Paintings provides an education, a social life and a way to visualise the world helping blind people to be part of our sighted world.

Living Paintings designs and publishes books for blind people allowing them to hear and feel pictures.

Living Paintings send these audio tactile books across the country through their postal library which is free to anyone in the UK who is blind or partially sighted. They lend to people at home, in schools or to other people working with or caring for those with sight loss. There are no membership fees and members can choose books via an online library, over the phone or in person.

Library membership can begin at pre-school age and continue through adulthood. We help at all ages and stages of life.

The raised pictures are hugely important to help children understand the world around them. By touching pictures of things they aren't able to see in real life. They offer books on everything from the Romans to science experiments which tie into the National Curriculum.

Now in their 31st year, Living Paintings reaches 15,500 blind and partially sighted people, including 8,000 children at home and in school. This small charity team is supported by an army of 460 fabulous volunteers and some well-known names including David Walliams, Martin Freeman, Joanna Lumley and Hugh Bonneville who lend their voices to the audio soundtracks.
